

The lizard and the blizzard.

This story includes words that have /z/
in the middle.

The lizard and the blizzard.

The lizard was looking forward to going out for the day. He got up early because he was so excited about going raspberry picking.

The lizard had such fun raspberry picking. He picked lots of raspberries and was looking forward to eating them for his tea.

While the lizard was raspberry picking, the weather turned nasty and a big blizzard started.

The blizzard knocked the lizard into a bunch of daisies. "Oh no! I've squashed the daisies!" said the lizard.

It was so windy in the blizzard and there was so much snow that the lizard couldn't see where he was going. He was then blown into a man. "It's freezing! Come with me and I can find us somewhere safe to stay until this blizzard is over," said the man who was freezing.

Then, the lizard and the man who was freezing were blown into a lady's house. The lady was really busy. "I'm far too busy for this!" said the busy lady.

“I’m trying to do my jigsaw and listen to my music and all I can hear is this blizzard! Why don’t you both stay with me until this blizzard is over?” she said.

The lizard, the man who was freezing and the busy lady had so much fun doing jigsaws and listening to music. Then, they made some big pictures by cutting little pictures out of magazines with scissors.

Soon the blizzard stopped and the lizard and the man who was freezing went home. “Thanks for a great day!” they shouted to the busy lady.

When the lizard got back to his tree, he was so hungry so he ate some of the raspberries that he had picked earlier that day. Then, he went to bed. “What an eventful day. I hope tomorrow is calmer,” thought the lizard and he fell straight to sleep.

The end.

